the construction of an isthmian canal by Washington, March 19.-Keen anxiety is felt in Washington for the health of John Hay, the Secretary of State. His personality, next to the President's, is the most important in Washington, and as an officlal his work is and has been of the utmost consequence to the nation and the outside world. The reports of his condition on boarding the steamer for an ocean voyage emphasize the rumor, current for some months. that his health will not permit of his continuing much longer at the head of the State Department. He has exhibited consciousness of his failing strength by an almost constant depression.

During this winter siekness has compelled him to spend much of the time at his home, transacting his most important business as Secretary of State from his library. His duties, too, have become the more heavy because of decidedly strained relations between the State Department and the Senate.

CONFRONTED MANY TROUBLES. Particularly difficult situations arose out f the arbitration treaties and the San Doningo affairs. Troubles in plenty he has confronted, all calculated to worry and weaken him.

Members of the Cabinet now believe that Secretary Hay will retire on his return from his voyage abroad. Despite the hosthity of some Senators who wish to figare more conspicuously in the statesmanship of our foreign affairs, the President stands by Hay and will be reluctant to lese his services. But the belief prevails, nevertheless, that the public career of the most eminent Secretary of State is about It is the byword for all of the many ar-
